

KENTUCKY RENAISSANCE

Spring brings dogwood trees dyeing the hills like the hands of a blackberry picker, pale pink at the palms, blue-black at the edges, stretching out toward abandoned pear orchards, which forgetting to bear, remember to bloom, rich and white and caught by sunlight in a clearing at lambing time bleating with promise.

- Trecia R. Greene

1990